BASSETT & CO.

A beaut ful dream! Let us see how't is tu filled Ohio is the State which, more than all others, his moved heaven an learth to get high dutids on wool. It is there that the so-called "political shepherds" live and have their being—viz, Delano, liarpater and Lawrence.

In a State like this the protectionist.

It is clear that the "home market" shepherds" live and have their being—viz. Delano, liarpater and Lawrence.
In a State like this the protectionist dream ought to be realized. Any woolen mill there ought to have a smooth road to prosperity.

What are the facts? The Dry Goods

factorer is satisfied, and both can not be at the same time. When Congress tries to content them both it simply attempts the impossible. That does not discourage the average protectionist Congressman. He continues to fancy that there is balm somewhere in his Gilead of protection, and if grower and manufacturer of wool have not pros-pered under twenty years of high pro-tection he w.ll give still higher protec-tion. But even if some way could be found for giving the farmer an advantage equal to the burden that protection has laid upon him, is it not clear that the two advantages—his own and the manufacturer's—would precisely balance each other. Equal protect on to both sides means no protection to either, and protection to only one side means loss to the other; for protection has a money value, and if it is to enrich some it can value, and if it is to enrich some it can balance for giving half a dozen other traps in operation, all doing steady and infallible work on their excited and philanthropic brethren. The farmer may set as many crows as he likes, for after getting his first one the supply will last as long as there is a free crow in the neighborhood, but half a dozen of these yelling and clutched.

Let anything in nature become life-less and inactive, and decay follows. tion.

Meanwhile what of millions who wear

What are the facts? The Dry Goods E-onomist prints the following piece of news: "The woolen mill at Findley, O, has ceased to do business, and the building is now used as a glass factory."

The mill at Findley was doubtless among that large number (James Dolan, the great protectionist wool manufacturer, of Philadelphia, said in his letter to Senator Quay one-half of all the mills in the country) which were shut down during the summer.

But why did this mill select the glass woolen clothing? Have they nor ghts!
Are they never to be considered! As Senator Plumb says: "The people of the United States ought to have their inning some time, and I think that time has come now." statement quoted approvingly by Sena-tor Plumb from a friend of his that "the American manufacturer

Among the protectionists one some-times hears fair-sounding words about revising the tar ff in such a way that its burdens will rest on all alike. They want what McKinley calls "a just and equitable rev sion of the tar ff." Some demand a tar ff that will be as much in urer as to other articles on which he can not make satisfactory profits?" Did the enormous protect on on window glass tempt the Findiay woolen milt to change itself into a glass factory? And on the soil of Ohio, too, where it could buy its wool right at its doors and prove the truth of the "home market" theory! But the 'home market" theory has worked no better for the Ohio wool grower than it has for the manufacturer. Pennsylvania affords a still more striking illustration of the workings of the home market theory when applied to wool. Philadelphia is the greatest manufacturing center in America in the consumption of wool. Surely Fennsylequitable rev sion of the tar fi." Some demand a tar ff. that will be as much in the interest of the consumer as of the produce. Senator P.umb, in his speech attacking the McKiniey bill, said that "whatever is done should be for the average interest of all."

This is one of the dreams of the protectionists from which it seems that they will nave a ward.

This is one of the dreams of the protectionists, from wh ch it seems that they will never awake—a tariff that will do everybody good in an equal measure.
But how will the protectionists set about making such a tariff?
In order to protect the manufacturer
the tar ff must of necessity enable him to sell at higher prices—otherwise there is no protection.

se everybody good in an equal measure.

But how will the protectionists set about making such a tariff?

In order to protect the manufacturer and the tar ff must of necessity enable him to sell at higher prices—otherwise there is no protection.

Very well, then; you have put up prices for one man; the only fair thing to do is to put them up for others—for all others. You are bound to put up prices for all consumers on the goods which they sell, in order to make good the loss sellow the sellow they sell in order to make good the sellow they sell in order to make good the sellow they sell in order to make good the loss which they sell in order to make good the sellow they sell in order to make good the sellow they sell in order to make good the sellow they sell in order to make good the sellow they sell in order to make good the sellow they sellow noway-do?" The result of all this high protection on wool is that sheep raising has increased only in the remote West and Northwest where vast tracts of uncultivated land can still be rented or beught at very low rates. other. Equal protect on to both sides means no protection to either, and protection to only one side means loss to the other; for protection has a money value, and if it is to enrich some it can only do so by making others poorer. Protect on s not a thing that can simply be voted by Congress without any one feeling it. The increased price has to be paid by the consumer; and in this way the farmer not only, fails to reap a way the farmer not only fails to reap a benefit from protection, but he has to make up for the protection gains o others, all the time and everywhere.

Is he willing to stand that? It he is willing how long can be afford it? Will the time not come sooner or later when he will see that he is playing a losing game? Has not that t me come when the farmer sees his land values declining enormously, when he finds the mortgag on his farm about to be forcelosed?

The only two ways, then, in which protect on can benefit the farmer—first, by giving him a home market which will pay him a higher price forch's products than the forsign market will pay; and second, by placing duties on his products which will enable him to sell at higher prices—are fieth seen to offer him absolutely nothing to make up for the increased cost which the manufacturer's protection has laid upon him.

the Grizzly Lodge, I can not consistently feel that I am at all unfortunate in not being able to get away.

"At Grizzly Lodge, if you complain of the smallness of the portions, you are told that they are in reality large, but appear diminutive to your vision only because your vision is acted upon by your gnawing mountain appetite. Therefore, in this house I may enjoy Grizzly Lodge at its best—which is the guide-book description, and still be within half a block of a first-class restaurant.

"It costs fifteen dollars to travelfrom Grizzly Lodge to Campobello, but in my hall bed-room I can make the journey in a second by turning a page. Here I am in Campobello in a first-class hotelin the guide book—and, looking at the picture, I see the wavelets curling like weary tiger lilles beneath the silvery moon. —God works with broken reeds. If a man conceits himself to be an iron pillar, good can do nothing with orbein and conclidence has to be taken out of him first. He has to be brought low before the Father can use him for his purposes. The low-lands hold the water, and, if only the sluce is goon, the gravitation of his grace does all the rest, and carries the flood into the depths of the lowly heart.—Alexander Mallaren.

"I tell you, Horatio, there is nothing so pleasant as a guide book vacation, because there is no disappointment; you don't have to tip the waiters, you don't have to sleep in a room so narrow that you can not turn over in bed without falling over your trunk, you don't have to attend to your correspondence by sitting on the bed, having your feet against an elastic wall, and writing on your knee, and you don't have to sleep on a bed that's so uneven that you awake rounds. I am the old optimist that believes firmly in the guide-book vacation, for it stretches through all the year, enables you to paddle among the lilies in December, to catch fish out of season, and as hoot in great quantities animals that are really extinct. Pray, excuse me, gentle reader, for I am an impocunious dry-goods clerk, and I tremble until the very scissors jingle in my vest pocket, when I think of to-morrow, and the rural mobilat warm the place on every bargain day, and I want to lose myself in the howling wilderness of the North Woods, and float off into rosy visions to the murmurous melody of the sparkling, silvery Ultowana.

gracefully. Certainly there can rarely be found one willing, if necessity required, to walk the length of a drawing room alone, knowing that she was the center of all eyes. Ungracefulness is due to lack of symmetrical development. A savage is graceful, and little boys and girls are nearly always graceful, unless their inheritance is very bad and the examples they see are worse. Nature is always graceful. The lines and curves of flowers and trees are those of beauty, while the movements of bees and birds and animated nature generally are lines of grace and symmetry. The laws which govern these lines and curves apply to human beings; men and women, highest in the scale of life, ought to be the most graceful of all, but as a matter of fact it is not so. By the time they are twenty-five er thirty years old their natural grace has fallen into decay from neglect of physical culture, and they are awkward and ungainly. A well-cared for and not over-worked horse is as graceful as a colt, but human beings who are graceful at maturity are very scarce. The most of them are more like old starge horses in which some muscles are over-developed while others are wasted away. Their vocations lead them to strengthen some muscles abnormally while others are muscles abnormally while others are wasted away.
